In the future, job specifications required in the financial industry will include compliance regulators, compliance and operational risk controllers, information technology engineers, APP designers, big data analysts, and social media marketing specialists. In addition, people with cross-industry experience are also becoming welcome in this industry. The development of financial digitization technology will increasingly link different industries and businesses; therefore, skills and experience from various industries will be brought into the financial industry to further stimulate creativity.

Last but not least, future employees in the financial industry will also need to be equipped with sufficient language ability to communicate with foreigners. The need exists already, but will become even more of a requirement for new staff.

In recent years, Taiwan's government has promoted the slogans of "Asian Cup" and "New Southbound Policy" for the financial industry. To make these slogans a reality, it is vital for civil servants and business people in Taiwan to communicate with foreigners via their own languages.

All in all, if you want to be a successful person, you should become a well-prepared person, ready to face challenges in the future. Learning new language skills is part and parcel of this challenge.
